Participial Adjectives

You can recognise these words by their endings, either '-er' or '-ing', They are called participial adjectives because they often have the same endings as verb participles. The past participle 'ed' ending to describe feelings; the present participle 'ing' to indicate the cause of the feeling. They are like any other adjective in that they help to describe a noun:

"Pablo has been doing the same job for ages. Every day he does exactly the same thing. Pablo's job is boring. Pablo is bored with his job."

You can say:

You can say:

My job is...boring, interesting, tiring, depressing, etc.

I'm bored with my job. I'm not interested in my job anymore. I'm always tired when I finish work. My job makes me depressed.

'-ing' tells you about the job. Think of it like your opinion of something.

'-ed' tells you how you feel about your job. Since only people (and some animals) have feelings, -they can't be used to describe an object/situation.
